The Cartographic History of the Black Mountain Massif

Studies of Field Systems in the British Isles

Renaissance through the nineteenth century. The authors go beyond traditional cartographic research, approaching the maps as political instruments rather than as simple geographical or historical tools. The result is an unprecedented land-based national power. The Cadastral Map in the Service of the State: A History of Properly Mapping, illustrated with 127 maps, traces the development and application of rural property mapping in Europe and European colonies from the European colonies. During the seventeenth century, governments began to use maps to secure economic and political bases; by the nineteenth century, these maps had become tools for aggressive governmental control of land as tax bases, land-based national power. This magnificent collection, drawn from seven centuries of maps held in the National Archives at Kew, looks at a variety of maps, from those found in 14th Century manuscripts, through early estate maps, to sea charts, maps used in military campaigns, and maps drawn from the creativity of the 16th Century to the modern age. The maps are arranged chronologically, and each is accompanied by a short description that provides context and a directory to the key areas of land and local history it research is a book that all family and local historians should have on their shelf.

The Cadastral Map in the Service of the State: A History of Properly Mapping

This is a fascinating and unusual journey through the world of maps and mapmakers. This is an important reference volume that covers developments in almost every aspect of British library and information work during the ten-year period 1991-2000. Some forty contributors, all of whom are experts in their subject, provide a robust treatment of the subject. This is an essential reference resource for librarians and information professionals.

This study provides evidence of a widespread settlement pattern that existed in an upland area of the Eastern Massif of the Black Mountains in South-East Wales, now sparsely populated, and that they can be dated from the late medieval and early post-medieval periods respectively.

The Relations of History and Geography

From 1836 to 1943, the Tithe, Valuation Office, and National Tithes Maps for Family and Local History shows how three great land surveys can provide information on ancestral homes, as well as fascinating historical snapshots of specific areas.

The works of this book are the fruit of enthusiastic teamwork by Laura J. Snyder. Historian of science and philosopher Laura J. Snyder exposes the political passions, religious impulses, friendships, rivalries, and love of knowledge—and power—that drove the coffee meetings. The result is an unprecedented land-based national power.
