they do. He looks back at scenes from his own life that were moulded by medical malady, and traces the crooked roots of each affliction through the lives of his ancestors, whose grim maladies punctuate the public documents or military records and Blood combines McGann’s passion for genealogy with an academic interest in the social dimensions of medicine - and fuses these with a lifelong exploration of drama as a way to understand what motivates human beings to do the things

In Flesh and Blood, Sunday World Investigations Editor, Nicola Tallant looks at the rising phenomenon of murder-suicide in Ireland, at events which, while shocking in the extreme, happen in tight-knit communities, behind the closed doors of the home. What are the common factors that lead to such tragic outcomes? Is it too easy to whitewash these crimes as those of the mentally ill? Or can jealousy tip the scales in an otherwise balanced mind? Are there common factors that link these cases? And what steps can be taken to stop the rising tide of murder-suicide? This book provides a unique supplement to (if not a logical part of) your life. How can murder-suicide prevention be effective in rural and urban communities? This book provides new ways of thinking and writing about flesh in the nineteenth century.
