
The Chimbu people live in the highland rainforest on the island of New Guinea. The Chimbu practice subsistence agriculture through shifting cultivation. This means they have gardens on arable land that has been cleared of vegetation. The languages are spoken by around 3 million people. The core of the family is considered to be established, but its boundaries and overall membership are uncertain. The languages are spoken by around 3 million people.

Rainforests | National Geographic Society
Rainforest | National Geographic Society

Trans–New Guinea (TNG) is an extensive family of Papuan languages spoken in New Guinea and neighboring islands, perhaps the third-largest language family in the world by number of languages. The core of the family is considered to be established, but its boundaries and overall membership are uncertain. The languages are spoken by around 3 million people.

Rainforest | National Geographic Society

The Languages of New Guinea - Wikipedia

The Languages of New Guinea - Wikipedia

Rainforest | National Geographic Society

Trans–New Guinea (TNG) is an extensive family of Papuan languages spoken in New Guinea and neighboring islands, perhaps the third-largest language family in the world by number of languages. The core of the family is considered to be established, but its boundaries and overall membership are uncertain. The languages are spoken by around 3 million people.

Rainforest | National Geographic Society

The Languages of New Guinea - Wikipedia

The Languages of New Guinea - Wikipedia

The Languages of New Guinea - Wikipedia

The Languages of New Guinea - Wikipedia

The Languages of New Guinea - Wikipedia

The Languages of New Guinea - Wikipedia

The Languages of New Guinea - Wikipedia
